

In a world where the whole agenda is belittling men, masculinity, and promoting feminism, it's hard for boys to turn into men. If you're a young man who's struggling to find meaning in his life, then you're not alone.

There are millions of boys walking on the face of the planet, not knowing what is wrong with them. Modern society treats you like you're broken from the get-go; you need to show emotion, you need to have feminine traits, and you have to be vulnerable.

However, that's a recipe for disaster. In the older times, boys would become men from a single wave of trauma, whether involved in a long and hard battle or becoming the sole earner of their houses.

But what do men like Andrew Tate, Myron Gaines, and Hamza have in common that let them transition from boys to men? Today, we discuss the 4 things that turn boys into men and spoiler alert: this one will sting.

So, by putting the ego aside and entering learning mode, let's get started.

Men vs. Women - How Are They Different?

You see, the modern-day world feminizes men. If you don't show emotion, you can't be friends with girls, let alone relationships. If you take control of your life and stand up for yourself in a relationship, you're suddenly toxic. And if you go to the gym, you're fatphobic.

It seems like what Andrew Tate calls "Matrix" is actually a thing. While it's not like the movies, it's real. If a woman is pretty, she's treated like a queen. There would be sims around her, trying to sleep with her, which heightens her self-confidence and gives her this sense that she can make anything come true.

But when it comes to men, it doesn't happen. Men are stuck in this perpetual state of confusion, trying to get emasculated by the mainstream media, schools, and even churches now, and they still have to become the best version of themselves.

If the video hurts you, then I have some good news. You're not alone. But here's even better news: We're talking about the four things that turn boys into men.

1. Discipline Instead of Motivation

First, we have discipline instead of motivation. It's fairly simple to sit on your butt all day and watch motivational videos of David Goggins, Andrew Tate, Luke Belmar, and dozens of other influencers. But it's hard to run a marathon like Goggins, work hard like Tate, and build a brand like Luke.

Why? Well, because you're chasing motivation to do the bare minimum in life. Nowadays, our youth has weakened so much that we can't go to the gym without our headphones or pre-workout.

Watching videos all day gets you nothing. So, the next time you wait for the motivation to come, just think to yourself, “Why am I procrastinating in the first place,” or “What will this clip or sudden rush do to me.”

If you answer that it will help you, then it's wrong. You see, all your favorite self-improvement influencers have one thing in common. They simply do not care about motivation and waiting for the right time.

Whether you have an upcoming exam, a project that you must deliver, or something pending in your job or business, instead of relying on motivation, just set realistic deadlines and get them done.

Just consider someone like Floyd Mayweather. While the dude loved partying, he would later run to his home just to burn off those extra calories and still stay focused. It's your duty as a man to provide and protect your family.

It's your duty as a man to wake up at the right time and feel like the conqueror of the world. It's your duty as a man to stop consuming hedonistic videos, stop playing video games, and actually start working towards something.

Whether it's the next PR you're chasing, a good grade, or starting your online business, you need discipline. The sooner, the better, and that's how you become disciplined in life. You simply do not care about motivation, as it's your duty to do the things that you must do.

Taking on Responsibilities and Risks

The second point is that you need to take on responsibilities and set your standards high. Aim so high that people think you're crazy. Divide that goal into small steps, take risks, and fulfill those responsibilities.

However, the best thing you can do for yourself is to limit your video game and social media consumption. Interestingly enough, Men always step down if they're not needed. And that's to modern-day feminists and men-haters; we feel like men are no longer needed.

That's why most men are still living in their mom's basement. So, it's your duty as a man to go out there and seek challenges and responsibilities. The best thing you can do for yourself right now is to grab a paper or open the notes app and write a complete goal that you want to achieve.

For example, a goal for someone could be, “I want to make $10,000 a month as a Digital Marketing Specialist.” Now that you have a goal, you must ask yourself the right questions. You must ask yourself whether it is even possible for you to earn $10,000 a month with Marketing. How many hours do you have a week? How quickly can you start learning? Thinking is the most powerful thing in the world, and the modern-day world limits your thinking capabilities.

And at some point in your life, you must take risks. You might need to leave a girl from a toxic relationship, or friends that aren't as productive as you, or maybe you just want to do an expensive course that's gonna cost you a good amount of money; take risks but take calculated risks.

Being in the Best Physical Shape

The third thing that changes boys into men, both mentally and physically, is being in the best shape possible. The modern-day tells you that nothing is wrong with your body, you don't need to put on muscle, you're fat, and you're okay.

That is absolutely not the best idea. As a man, you must be capable of violence, even if you don't get the chance to use it. Working out is healthy if you do it naturally. You build muscle, but along with that muscle, you also build mental toughness. Why do you think guys like Andrew Tate were in jail for almost half of 2023 and could survive?

Do you think a weak-willed, untrained guy would survive that long without knowing what he was even in jail for? Well, no. The point is that you're a man, and the traditional role of a man is to protect and provide for his family.

You should see the absolute best of what your genes have to offer. As a young man or even an older man, you should never ignore working out. Getting in some boxing or Muay Thai lessons, getting towards that next deadlift PR, or just involving yourself in some sports will absolutely change your mindset.

Why? It's because you're going to build both mental and physical resilience. Working out is non-negotiable if you want to become a man.

Becoming Financially Free

Lastly, at number 4, the thing that really gives men power is good old money. Money is indeed the root of all evil, but without money, even if you have anything in the world, you would simply not survive.

Having six-pack abs won't pay for the bill unless you're a model or a fitness trainer. So, becoming financially free is the best way a man can get respect and help his friends and family. You need to escape this thought that less is okay. There's no way you can survive with the big dogs with a mediocre mindset.

You might be born poor, but you shouldn't die poor. You shouldn't blame anyone but optimize the cards you're given. Your main priority as a man should be to earn a lot of money so you can become financially free and lead a life that's on your terms, where people are not your God.

Final Verdict

These were the 4 things that turn boys into men. The modern-day society thinks feminizing men is okay, but they don't understand that the long-term effects are going to be bad. Emotions aren't bad, but emotions used badly are bad.

So, if you're a boy wanting to turn into a man, consider incorporating these four skills into your life, and you'll be surprised to see how far you can go.

And if you liked the video, make sure to subscribe and ring the bell icon so the next time I post a video, you can have a chance to become a better man. Until next time.